International Graduate — Business & Operations Background

ORIGIN

Ho Chi Minh
City, VN

EDUCATION

MMgt,
Melbourne

EXPERIENCE

3 yrs, Retail Ops

TARGET ROLE

Ops / Business
Support

GOAL

Land an operations or business support role in Australia — but roles in that space increasingly list "data literacy" or "AI tool familiarity" he's never formally been taught.

FRUSTRATIONS

- 01 Silent rejection. Applies to roles listing unfamiliar requirements and gets no response — never learns if it was a hard blocker or a nice-to-have.
- 02 Invisible experience. Three years of real leadership and operations work doesn't map to anything a local recruiter recognises — his job titles are Vietnam-specific.
- 03 No sense of priority. Willing to upskill, but faced with a wall of unfamiliar terms — Power BI, SQL, prompt tools — he doesn't know which to learn first, so he freezes or guesses.

Signature problem: The Ladder

Which rung does he climb first?

|----|----------------------------------|------------------------|
| 01 | Excel-based data reporting       | appears in 9 of 10 JDs |
| 02 | Power BI / dashboard familiarity | appears in 6 of 10 JDs |
| 03 | Basic SQL                        | appears in 4 of 10 JDs |
| 04 | Prompt-based AI reporting tools  | appears in 3 of 10 JDs |
| 05 | No-code automation basics        | appears in 2 of 10 JDs |

↳ START HERE — HIGHEST-FREQUENCY GAP

"I don't know if I'm missing the skill, or just missing the label for a skill I already have — and if I am missing one, I don't know which one to fix first."

HOW SKILL BRIDGE HELPS

US-2 Skill Translator

US-3 Transferable Highlighter

US-5 Honest Gap Flagging

Minh's real operations and leadership experience is translated and highlighted as genuinely transferable — and his gaps are surfaced honestly, then ranked by how often they matter across his target roles, so his next step is obvious instead of overwhelming.
